How would we cope with a Mumbai-style attack in Europe?

2nd March 2010,

Crowne Plaza St Peters, Rome

Overview:

Investment in aviation security in response to the threat from international terrorism has largely galvanised border agency and private sector stakeholder partnership activity. Prospective aviation targets for terrorist attack have undoubtedly been hardened since 9/11. However, the November 2008 attacks in Mumbai revealed the devastation terrorists could achieve by penetrating maritime borders.

This fully interactive workshop will give you the opportunity to explore whether maritime security has kept pace with the world of aviation and, if so, how effectively it has progressed in terms of:

- intelligence strategy
- multi-agency threat & risk assessment
- joint operational response capability

Benefits of attending:

The workshop will allow delegates to share their experiences and explore worrying gaps in many aspects of border security. It will also incorporate the crucial role of the private sector: both as frontline security providers, and as suppliers of essential technology & other supporting commodities.

Delegates will participate in developing an operational response to a planned terrorist attack within a border environment, which will highlight the associated vulnerabilities and opportunities, and will help them build a cohesive response to the security challenge.

While the workshop will focus on the maritime environment for the main event, it will take a reality-based and holistic approach by incorporating exploitation of other forms of border environment.

Half day programme:

- 1230 Coffee and registration
- 1.00 Maritime border security - open discussion on major threats and related issues
- 1.30 Establishing the requirement - any current solutions?
- 2.00 An operational scenario - syndicate session
- 2.30 Afternoon tea
- 3.00 An operational scenario - syndicate session (continued)
- 3.40 Building a response
- 4.10 Conclusions and feedback
- 5.00 Close of Workshop
